Of course, the Buddhists of Buddhist countries don't look upon Buddhism as a psychotherapy. It is mainly understood as a form of religion. Of course, those scholars who study the teaching of the Buddha... tend to regard the teaching as a philosophy. Now as I see it, these two ways of thinking can be seen as two extremes.

psychotherapy is the distinction that is made in Buddhism between what I shall term insight at the conventional or mundane level and what I shall term awakening or realization. Although there is a gradual a path within Buddhism where we could say that insights accumulate, ultimately the Buddha taught one central thing – awakening.
