A process at this point is considered to be at chemical equilibrium (or equilibrium). While the amounts of reactants and products seems to be unchanging, is important to note that the processes do not stop. They balance out each other so that there is no further net change; that is, chemical equilibrium is a dynamic equilibrium. Imagine 20 people in a room and every time one person leaves, another person enters; even though there is movement, the number of people stays constant.

As the reaction begins ($t = 0$), the concentration of the N_2O_4 reactant is finite and that of the NO_2 product is zero, so the forward reaction proceeds at a finite rate while the reverse reaction rate is zero. As time passes, N_2O_4 is consumed and its concentration falls, while NO_2 is produced and its concentration increases (Figure 13.2b). The decreasing concentration of the reactant ...
